Excerpt: .the velocity of sound in free air, and the length, such as it can be observed, of the concameration s that are formed in a flute-tube, is not verified exactly. He hints at some experiments proper for making evident the cause of this discordance, but I am not aware that any such have been published. As this method fails in giving exactly the ratio of the specific heats of atmospheric air, M. Dulong adopts a ratio (viz. 1-421) which he says is the mean of a great number of direct observations made in free air by different observers. I mention this particularly, as it seems to have been supposed that Dulong M. Poisson a excellent Treatise on Mechanics is a work so extensively used that it is desirable to point out any error that may have inadvertently crept into it. I do not therefore...
