Here are the facts and here is a definite plan for providing adequate housing throughout this country. The author, an editorial writer for the Chicago Sun, has for several years been investigating the housing problem from every angle, and in clear, forceful style he now suggests a course of action that flows logically from the indisputable needs of our time. He measures the deficiencies of our present living conditions - they will shock most of the readers of this book. He describes the barriers that stand between us and decent living quarters at a price the ordinary American can afford - this is a book that minces no words.
