Excerpt: . enters the root tissues--by Tschirch, Brunchorst, and others. And the relation between the plant and its nodules has, to some extent, been explained by the Rothamsted experiments, in which the growth and ripening of the plant were shown to be coincident with progressive exhaustion of the nitrogenous matter of the nodules whilst on the other hand, with plants not ripe, or of more than annual growth, there was accumulation in the nodules--that is, provision for future growth. (6) It must, however, be admitted that we are still completely in the dark as to the nature of the chemical process by which nitrogen is first brought into combination within the nodules, and what is the first compound formed. As far as agricultural plants are concerned, it is only those of the.-leguminous sub-order Papilionaceae on the roots of which nodules occur, and which in consequence...
